

Take Control and Responsibility of your Shears

Loose tension will cause immediate and destructive wearing of shears

Method of Lubrication: Open blades. Oil all Blade surfaces, including pivotal area. Open and close blades to work oil into pivot area, then, wipe blades clean with a chamois cloth. IMPORTANT: Lubricate your shears on a DAILY basis.

Dropping your shears can cause damage. Place on a shear pad when not in use and store them in a shear case. We have many shear cases available.

If your shear is bending or not cutting hair it could be due to the shears tension. Check your tension in the following way to determine whether or not your shears need servicing.

Hold your shears by the thumb ring with the point at 12 o'clock (fig. 1). Lift the finger ring/handle to 9 o'clock (fig.2) and let it drop. If your shears have a screw type tension system, the blade should stop somewhere around the 11 o'clock (fig.4) area. If it closes fast and completely, then your shears are too loose and need to be tightened slightly with the appropriate screw driver or tool the shears came with.

If your shears have any other type of tension system (locking plate, click ratcheted type of plate), the finger blade should stop at around the 10-11 o'clock (fig. 3 or 4) position.

Factory sharpening every 300 hair cuts, as well as daily cleaning, will ensure the highest level of sharpness to your shears.

We, along with many shear manufacturers recommend sharpening your shears every 300 hair cuts, or if your shears have been dropped. Thinner need sharpening too!

Do not purchase shears if tension screw is too short. Screw must be flush with tension knob to maintain the proper setting.

Some scissors with plastic or rubber bushings will lock up or constantly lose tension and even come apart if not kept in the proper setting. This is caused by stripping the soft threading and rendering the scissor useless! Even oiling will erode the bushings.

The integrity of the blade will be kept
